

The lighthouse stood at the edge of the cliff.
Every evening its beam swept across the dark water.
The keeper climbed the spiral stairs with a heavy lamp.

Far below, the waves crashed against the rocks.
He had kept this light burning for thirty years.